Social Work Research Guide. To start your essay or research paper, follow the steps below: Step 1: Topic and Background Information Step 2: Books and Bibliographies Step 3: Journal Articles Websites. Step I: finding your topic and background information. Research topics in Social Work may overlap with other subject areas such as Psychology, Women's Studies, Sociology, Nursing etc., so you may also want to look at the online Leddy Library guides for other subject areas. Once you have chosen your topic, the following reference books may help to provide background information or definitions of terms. Please note that this is a select list, so browse the reference collection for additional titles. Adoption References. This NASW research Web page focuses on adoption, a major area of child welfare guided by both social work research and efforts in social work to develop sound policies and practices. Adoption is an important service provided for children who cannot be cared for by their birthparents and who need and can benefit from new and permanent family ties. The role of social workers, usually carried out under the auspices of public or private adoption agencies, is to help support both the birth and adoptive parents and children through the adoption process and provide services that Social Work. Finding appropriate resources amongst the mass of information available is not always easy, but making use of the resources and assistance available here will make your efforts far more effective and successful. Before you begin searching for information ensure that you have correctly identified the subject or topic you require information on and what you are required to do with this information (outline, explain, compare/contrast, etc.).
